BULLYING

The British government has announced that school bullying has reached epidemic proportions. Last week, England's specially designated Commissioner for Children said nearly every child was affected by the problem. In the run up to Anti-Bullying Week, which starts today (November 21), education ministers are considering fining the parents of bullies. Pupils who attack or threaten their classmates could land Mom or Dad with a cash penalty of up to £1,710. Schools minister Jacqui Smith said: "This will send a strong message to parents that schools will not tolerate a failure to take responsibility for bullying." Additionally, there are proposals to give teachers a "clear right" to discipline children and "restrain them through reasonable force" where necessary.

Ms. Smith said: "Bullying should never be tolerated in our schools, no matter what its motivation." She added that: "Children must know what is right and what is wrong, and that there will be consequences for crossing the line." She spoke after a recent spate of particularly violent and disturbing cases in schools. Twelve-year-old bullies have preyed on their victims, slashing them with knives and using iron bars to beat them unconscious. One child was told she would be "dead meat" if she returned to school. Although the right to education without fear is enshrined in the UN convention on the rights of the child, it seems Britain's schoolchildren have gone haywire and are hell bent on tormenting and injuring other students rather than learning.

1. Write a composition on one of the following topics:

a. Is bullying a big problem at school? Give your opinion in no less than 80 words.

b) Write a story of at least 80 words beginning with the words: "Peter had never been bullied at school, but that Friday, everything changed."

2.a. Is the British government worried about bullying? Why/why not?

2.b According to the text, what weapons have bullies used?

3. Imagine your friend is being bullied at school Advise him/her to tell the teacher and give him/her a reason for doing so.

Workaholism

W.E. Oates claims to have invented the term workaholism in his 1971 book, Confessions of a Workaholic, when he defined it as an 'addiction to work, the compulsion or the uncontrollable need to work incessantly'. But though it seems a recent phenomenon, brought about by the relentless pace of modern civilisation, in reality workaholics have always existed. Go back to Roman times and Pliny the Elder, the famous writer and statesman, was starting his working day at midnight and having books read to him at mealtimes so that he didn't have to stop working.

Undeniably, it has become a serious cause for concern in the 21st century, and British workers are generally thought to be the longest-working employees. The macho culture of the City has had a vast effect on the hours people work, as has globalisation. The freedom the internet provides ironically binds people more closely to their work, as they can access it at home after hours. 10 percent of Britons could now be deemed workaholics purely by dint of the hours they work. How do you know if you're one of them?

There are certain common symptoms that denote the workaholic. Those who have let work take over to an unhealthy extent often find it difficult to hold a conversation about anything else, and this can put strain on their personal relationships; friends and spouses are often the first to notice, but the sufferers themselves are blinded to the problem. Workaholics rationalise by taking on more and more tasks. They also tend to find it difficult to relax, skimp on leisure time and see themselves trapped in the role of provider.

1. Write a composition on one of the following topics:

a) Do you think it's a problem for children if both their parents have a full-time job? Give your opinion in no less than 80 words.

b) Write a story of at least 80 words ending with the words: "This is why John's parents decided to remove the PC from his bedroom"

2.a. Does the writer think that workaholism is a modern phenomenon? Why/why not?

2.b According to the text, where do you find most workaholics nowadays?

4.a. Rewrite the following sentence in indirect style (reported speech), beginning: They asked:

How do you know you're one of them?

4.b. Rewrite the following sentence in negative-interrogative:

Workaholics rationalise by taking on more and more tasks.

5. Find two words in the text containing vowels or groups of vowels that are pronounced in the same way as o in work, a in pace, and a in anything. Underline the part of the word that contains the sound.
